Dear Mr McArthur,

In view of the fact that all forms of spectator betting sport are now banned all non-remote operators are without any form of income. The majority of these operators are self-employed sole traders whose assistants are self-employed contractors. As a consequence, they have no income with which to support their families other than Universal Credit which is not adequate and does not apply to anyone with savings of £16k.

Given the above information and the expectation that racing will not resume in the foreseeable future I would be obliged if you would consider waiving fees in the non-remote sector until normality resumes.

Yours sincerely

Christopher Hudson
